

EASILY
PERSUADE
ANYONE

GET PEOPLE TO DO WHAT YOU WANT

Copyright © 2010

The author Chris Hutchison holds full copyright for this eBook and it's Recorded Version. This eBook cannot under any circumstances be copied, electronically transferred in whole or in part.

All rights are retained by the author. Violation of this copyright will be punished to the fullness extend of the law.

Table of Contents

The Need to Persuade.....	4
Global Human Drives.....	7
The Fundamental Needs
The Everyday Needs
The Deep Need for Bonding
The Craving to Be Great
Individual Needs.....	11
Studying Your Target.....	13
The Slow Method
The Fast Method – Interrogator
Becoming Your Target
Persuade People to Like You.....	19
Show a Genuine Interest
Highlight Positive Traits
Never Criticize
Psychic Influence From the Heart Center.....	25
Using the Heart Chakra to Influence Others
Persuade People to Your Way of Thinking.....	29
People Are Motivated by This.....	33
Secret to Driving the Emotional Vehicle
The Covert Way to Persuade People to Do What You Want.....	39
Conclusion.....	46
Let Us Recap...

Chapter 1

The Need to Persuade

You cannot live a successful life without having great persuasive skills. Your ability to get others to like you, retain long rewarding relationships, make lots of money, secure a great job or even sell to others are all based on your ability to effectively persuade others.

Those who become good persuaders may become that through trial and error. However there is nothing like those rare individuals who make it their duty to learn the actual secrets of effectively persuading others. Those are the individuals whose lives seem to be on a winning streak no matter what they do. They tend to have a leadership quality without ever applying force or strain. They can always get others to help them when they are in need.

Perhaps you have also seen the value of persuading others and realized the edge that it will give you in your life. It does not matter if all you want is to have better relationships in life or if your goal is to achieve great riches, persuasion is the key.

Your life will start to change the moment you begin to practice these persuasion techniques that so few people know. Just imagine for a moment that by the end of this course not only will you be able to persuade others to like you, you will also be able to positively influence others to take the action that you want.

Using powerful psychological triggers you will know just what buttons to push to get others to eagerly do what you want. And, what's even more exciting is that you will never have to resort to the normal patterns that everyone else takes. You will certainly stand out from all others. You will never have to beg, force, criticize, hound or belittle anyone to get them to do what you want.

Can you see just how exciting life could be by learning these powerful secrets?

Before you go any further try to remember a time in your past when you really wanted someone to take action on some matter. Did you try very hard to win them over? Did you beg and plead? What then was the result then?

The key to persuading anyone is to never force, beg or belittle in the hopes of embarrassing the other to take action. Would you like to know the key to becoming a master persuader? This secret key is the foundation to persuading anyone. The moment you truly grasp this understanding it will immediately open up a new awareness for you.

The real secret of persuasion is to be skilled enough to place a burning desire inside of another. That desire must literally expand into an all consuming fire that the other becomes eager and excited to take action. In such a case there is no resistance what so ever. The one being persuaded will eagerly do for you what you desire. The way to create such a burning desire is to give people what they really want.

With that said there is a concise and covert method to achieving this. There are secret methods to giving people what they want while motivating them to take the action that you want. It is a step by step formula that must be understood and practiced. It is only through practice that you gain the true skill to master persuasion and achieve outstanding results.

Chapter 2

Global Human Drives

Before you can learn the secrets to easily persuading anyone you must first understand the human psyche. By understanding the human mind and disposition you can better influence another by using what already drives and motivates them.

All human beings are driven by basic fundamental needs and those needs determine how a person will act, what they are willing to do or not do. The everyday existence of a human being is controlled by their basic needs. If there is not a need there is no action. Everything we do from getting up in the morning to go to a job that we may or may not like, to how we spend our free time is based on fulfilling one of those basic fundamental needs.

So in order to first become a master of persuasion in all areas and with all people you must know the fundamental needs and wants that drive all human beings. These driving needs are such an integral part of the human experience that people will do absolutely anything to have those needs met.

When those basic needs are not met people will often go through severe states of depression and unrest until they get what they want.

Knowing what those needs are will give you an understanding of how to work with people based on the needs which drive them.

• The Fundamental Needs

Here is a list of the needs which drives others:

The need for money, food & shelter

The need for good health

The need for sexual fulfillment

The need to be loved

The need to be part of a group of likeminded people

The need to stand out and feel great or special

• The Basic Needs

These needs dominate a person's life. Before a person can move into the various categories they must pass certain needs. For example the need for money, food and shelter are basic survival needs. People who exist in those states could not effectively bond with others as they are still consumed with the idea and pursuit of fulfilling those basic needs. A person who struggles with getting money to eat or to pay for their shelter won't be occupied with thoughts of creating friendships. There is very little place for socializing or creating larger communities. However once those basic needs for food, money and shelter are met, then they move on to the next level of human needs.

• The Deep Need for Bonding

Once all the other basic needs such as food, money and shelter are attained most people will do anything to be accepted and part of a well supported group of likeminded people.

This happens to be the most common stage where most everyone spends a great deal of their time. That is why dating sites and forums are so important. People are always on the lookout to find others who share their interest. The need to bond with others who share similar values and support who a person really is at a deeper level is craved deeply by everyone. It is enough to drive many people to do whatever they can to fulfill this burning need for company and connection. A person's entire mental balance can be severely thrown off when they are not with others who mirror their deeper ideals and beliefs.

Have you heard others say that they can be very lonely even among many people? This need to identify with others who share our thoughts and ideas is essential to the overall wellbeing of another. Try to recall a time in your life when you did not fit in with those around you, or even a time where you may have felt a bit lonely. Can anything be more painful than loneliness?

• The Craving to Be Great

The moment a person's need to belong to a group is met the next driving need is the desire to stand out from the group and everyone else. This is demonstrated in a person's need to be special and great. Ultimately people crave deeply the desire to be seen as special and unique. This feeling of uniqueness sets them apart and beyond everyone else and persons who crave this will do whatever they can to achieve and sustain this feeling of greater than, special or unique.

They will seek out others who will feed them those ideas. There is nothing more stimulating to a person who wants to stand out than to be told by another that they are great. They will keep that person by their side as that person feeds their need for greatness.

At first everyone strives for sameness and belonging but as soon as that connection has been made the individual struggles for his own separate identity.

Chapter 3

Individual Needs

People are driven by their needs in every waking moment. Besides the general human needs each individual has his or her own personal needs which fall into the general category. An important element to persuasion is to understand what the individual needs of a person really are. No two people are alike, so no two people can be treated identically. As stated in the previous section people are only driven to action based on their needs. If there is not a need there is no action. And, you cannot effectively persuade another until you discover what their needs are.

When a person has a deep need it consumes their every waking moment. That need, can become their greatest suffering. And they will do just about anything to fix this need until it is fulfilled and replaced by another need.

Someone who has a need for money cannot be persuaded to buy an emerald ring. That person's basic need may be driven to create a shelter or to buy food to eat. While you may not be able to persuade them to purchase an emerald ring you could persuade them to do something else.

The individual needs are countless. People are driven everyday by the pursuit of beauty for example. Whether it is a man trying hard to cure his bald spot, a woman obsessed with getting Botox or the countless number of people who spend thousands every year on plastic surgery to look good. All these individual needs, based on a person to person basis, have their roots in the need to fit in to our desired group and our need to be loved.

People try very hard to fit into the group that they want to belong to and that is often preceded by self examination. A person will try their hardest to fit into the group by striving to be the best in order to be accepted by the group.

There are communities where people try to out rank each other with the best cars and the best homes and the best vacations. All of this will be done even if it eventually leads many to file for bankruptcy.

A man or woman looking to find their ideal partner, will be driven to spend lots of money recreating themselves in order to be an ideal or a perfect version of themselves. The need for perfection will consume their every waking moment, until they achieve what they imagine to be a suitable look to attract the partner that they want. Again this behavior falls into the human need to be loved, the need for sexual gratification and the need to belong.

Chapter 4

Studying Your Target

In order to persuade others, you have to know your target and you must know what your target wants. To believe that you can effectively persuade someone without knowing who they are would be foolish.

Remember from the previous section when I said that people are only driven by their wants and needs? In order to lead someone you have to know what their need is. You can only effectively persuade someone by giving them what they want. If this seems vague at first you will soon understand it all.

With that said you can get what you need quickly. It does not always have to take days or even hours to get the key elements to influence another but it certainly does take certain methods.

• The Slow Method

People love to tell you all about themselves and when a person is in a desperate state of need they won't hesitate to tell you what those needs are. It's quite easy because more often people are consumed with thoughts of their needs. Those obsessive thoughts often lead to severe depression. Naturally there are degrees to this and each and everyone will react to their needs differently based on how deeply they are affected.

When a person cannot seem to contain their worries, fears and troubles about their needs then they have probably endured this lack for quite some time. In such a case that person is now in desperate mode.

Even though people complain excessively about what is bothering them, those who they are complaining to don't register those complaints because the listener is probably consumed with his or her own desperate needs as well.

Think of how many times you were with a friend who went on and on about their problems. You may have listened for the first five minutes but where did your mind go for the rest of time after that? Sometimes a person's complaining might only make you think of your own worries and before you know it they are talking and you are only pretending to listen but your mind is on your own worries.

You can see this playing out when people are talking. The other person is only waiting for a moment for the talker to shut up or a pause in the conversation so he can interject his own story. Then the moment he pauses the other person interjects the rest of his story. It's pure madness but it's a common pattern in lots of conversations. People aren't listening to who you are or what you are saying, they are only waiting to be heard.

A good persuader listens and takes mental or physical notes. You have to pay acute attention and get as much detail about what is affecting the person you want to persuade.

• The Interrogator

Although it is not very hard to discover what a person's needs are it can still be challenging to clearly identify the degree and quality of those needs. In this case it's necessary to be more direct in order to discover who that person really is. One way to get to the heart of any individual is to lead them through a series of questions.

Questions force people to go inside of their heard, it forces them to think. A great deal of the time a person may have a concern about something they want to add or change in their life, but that person may still not be really clear about it until someone gets them to open up.

As an interrogator you have not only decided to ask a series of questions that lead to a deeper understanding of the other person; but you have also made up your mind to listen. This is not about you. You must show a genuine interest in the other person.

When you apply the interrogative process not only will you be discovering who the other person is, they themselves may be uncovering their own inner hidden nature. One of the biggest faults of human beings is that they don't take enough time to examine their lives or their deeper thoughts. So by leading them through a journey of their inner mind a whole world will be revealed.

You can start by asking questions which seem obvious. Don't be a drill sergeant. Instead, be a friend who has a genuine interest. Be one who is non-judgmental. The moment a person feels that you are being critical of who they are they will shut down and put up a wall. However when you show a genuine interest for who they are they will be more than willing to share, in fact they will tell you more than you need to know.

Start with questions that pertain to their needs. Think of the interrogative process like a tree. Envision in your mind that your initial inquire is as light as leaves and as you go deeper imagine those as the many branches on the tree. Then those branches lead to the stem and then the root of the tree which is who that person really is.

• Becoming Your Target

The secret of effective persuasion has a concise formula. And any missing ingredient would make an ineffective formula. The following process is what flour is to cake making. The ability to go inside of your target is crucial. You will realize the tremendous level of power and leverage you will gain over anyone by applying the following technique. It does not matter if your desire is to influence your present partner or to acquire wealth or creating a cult following this technique is the catalyst to real persuasion.

Step one: get into a quiet place where you will not be disturbed for several minutes.

Step two: get centered. You can do this by following your breathing for several minutes. Don't alter your breath, just watch the flow of oxygen as it enters your nostrils. Fill your abdomen then exhales through your nostrils again. It's a circular motion that will clear your mind and move you into the ideal state of psychic awareness. Do this at least 10 full cycles.

Step three: once you are really centered and you are immersed in the rhythm of your breath begin with the following. Using your imagination, place your consciousness inside of your target. Pretend that you are genuinely able to go inside of your target and become them.

Step four: Pretend that you are your target. How does your target see the immediate world around them? How does your target's needs affect how they see life? How does your target relate to others? What does your target deeply want? What are they willing to do to get what they want? What are their weaknesses and concerns? How does your target see you? How can you be an effective solution to your target?

Step five: Experience everyday life from your target's point of view. Trace your targets day from the time they get up as they go off to work and interact with the world around them until they return home.

Can you now see more clearly who you are dealing with? This can bring a whole level of understanding. What you do with this information is up to your character and personal morals. You can severely manipulate a person with this knowledge or you can bring empathy to the situation. All human beings need a great deal of understanding and non judgment. Use this information to positively influence others to a higher way of being.

Chapter 5

Persuade People to Like You

With so much strife among people you would think it were really impossible for people to get along. This really isn't so. If you truly have the desire to get along with others and to be liked you will find the following techniques will change your relationships with others. People will not only like you they will seek you out. They will prefer your company to others. And, when you can get people to like you, your ability to persuade them is already half done.

It is very easy to persuade another once you have gotten them to think favorably of you. In order to get someone to like you, there must be a level of trust. Trust is something which builds up over time or if you know how to persuade others you can create that level of trust and likability very fast. Once a person has created trust in you their filters of resistance are down and they will easily agree to whatever you tell them or present to them.

I am sure at this point you don't want to go the long and hard route, you want to build quick trust and likability in everyone you meet. In this case there are 3 key elements to persuade others to really like you.

- Show a Genuine Interest

Instead of trying to get others to be interested in you, place the focus on the other person. Become genuinely interested in the likes and dislikes of the other person. Get to know their story. When you show an interest in others you are fulfilling the need that many people have and that is the need to being loved as well as the need to be received and understood by someone else. Most people really crave this.

Few people show an interest in others because most people are tied up in their own worries and needs that they very rarely devote any time to the interest of others; unless that other person shares in the same worries as they do. In this case they will spend time swapping sad stories with each other. What is more common is that while one person is sharing their story the other person is rarely ever listening they are just eagerly awaiting the time when they can interject and tell their woes. So in essence no one is listening to anyone. People just want to be heard.

Show an interest in others by taking note of the things that they care about. Create a mental note and remember to bring it up again. One girl had been busy swapping stories with a guy she recently met. During the conversation she casually told him that she just loved fortune cookies because they always seemed to be on target with answering whatever concerns she had in her mind. She also told him that she absolutely loved Dolphins and had a special spiritual affinity for them.

One day to her amazement, he sent her a box filled with fortune cookies and several beautiful pieces of art with, you guessed it Dolphins! Can you imagine the impact that guy had on the girl?

Those gestures while simple build a strong impact and immediately create good feelings. If someone is willing to recall such small details imagine how attentive they must be. How can you not want to please a person like this? This guy has used a very powerful persuasive technique. Subconsciously it would make it very hard for that girl to say no to him if he needed anything.

When someone has extended a gesture of kindness, especially as unexpected this creates a subconscious dept...a feeling that we should somehow obliged to extend the same level of kindness or greater.

• Highlight Positive Traits

People will quickly criticize a thing that they don't like and say nothing for the thing that they do like. How many relationships have gone sour because each partner spent more time complaining and criticizing the small things which irritated them? Yet on the other had there may have been numerous things that their partner did right yet there was not one word of support.

Highlight people's positive traits as often as you can. Everyone has a list of positive qualities. If you took the time to examine your friends, your coworkers, your family members and your spouse you will see that every single person has a list of good qualities. There are many positives to each person. But, do you know that many people live their whole life without anyone ever telling them how good they are? Imagine how sad and underappreciated many people feel about themselves. Yet most people know all too well the judgment and criticism that others launch at them all the time.

It's the rare individual who will make the effort to highlight the good in others. When you make a habit of complementing others they will naturally feel very good about themselves when they are with you. People crave this feeling. They will light up and feel wonderful when they are with you because you are the one who generates this feeling inside of them, they will genuinely associate their good feelings with you.

Here is one technique to apply in easily persuading those you already know to like you. Make a list of everyone you come in contact with, whether they be family members, co-workers or your spouse. On a separate piece of paper list each person and beneath that person's name list at least seven positive qualities that person possesses. Take the time to examine those qualities before moving on.

Now that you have your list you must make it your duty to genuinely complement each person with at least one of those positive qualities. The idea of this technique is to do it as often as you can. Find a way to interject that compliment into a conversation as often as you can. You can say something such as, “You know Mary I was noticing how well you do X. I really love that quality because few people do it the way you do.”

A complement fed by a reason is far more believable and substantial. Remember to always add the why. Complement and then add the reason why you felt the way you do. A person will remember the compliment and when it backed by a positive explanation it will trigger more positive feelings inside of them. They will also remember it for many days or even years to come.

- Never Criticize

If you want to kill any chances of positively persuading another then criticizing them will surely do that. When you criticize another their defensive walls go up to protect themselves. You immediately kill any trust that could have been built. Instead of criticizing others for their beliefs or their actions try to imagine what you would do if you were in their situation. It's very easy for us to assume that we know what a person is going through from the outside but to place yourself inside of that person's situation and see the world the way they see it will give you a better understanding.

If someone expresses a point that you don't particularly agree with don't show judgment instead say something like, “If I were you I would do the same thing.” This really isn't insincere after all if you were that other person with their experiences you would probably take the same action they did.

Chapter 6

Psychic Influence From the Heart Center

Our minds are powerful instruments to transmit thought frequencies. Your mind literally broadcast thoughts charged with intense feeling out to any target. This works just like radio frequencies. Have you ever wondered how those radio frequencies travel with such an impact to your home? Have you ever taken the time to think of how a wireless phone is able to connect you to the source of your call?

We take these things for granted but they are all part of a system of invisible energetic wave frequencies. These frequencies may be invisible to the human eye but powerful in their ability to interact with and influence their target.

Everyday your personal thought waves are in contact with others and they are interacting as well as influencing the way people think and feel about you. Why not use this powerful understanding to build unity and excitement in the minds of others towards you.

Here is a powerful technique. This technique is tremendously powerful. Damaged relationships have been mended after following this practice. Relationships on the verge of breaking up were repaired. Naturally if you are in a bad relationship which has gone through many years of being induced with lots of volatile or negative thought frequencies, it's going to take a lot of work on your part to neutralize those old patterns that you have saturated the other with. It takes doing this daily for several weeks or months.

- Using the Heart Chakra to Influence Others

Step one - Using the exercise in the previous section, make a list of at least 7 positive qualities possessed by the person whom you wish to influence to like you.

Step two - Get into a quiet state where you will not be disturbed for twenty to thirty minutes. Then place your hand on your heart.

Step three - breath slow rhythmic breaths. Following the in and out flow of your breathing, don't try to alter your breath simply follow it. This awareness of your breathing will connect you to your psychic center where you will connect with your psychic mind for massive effect.

Step four - Place your hand on your heart. Recall the list of positive qualities you have written for the person you want to positively influence with the feeling of love. Start with the first quality on the list and repeat it over and over as if you are sending those positive thought out to the other. You may want to say something such as, "I love the way you do, then fill in the blank...or I love this about you.” Whatever positive thoughts you can achieve allow yourself to do that. Repeat each statement over and over again at least ten times. Get into a rhythm with the statements. If you have 5 statements then you should be able to repeat a total of 50 statements repeating each statement a total of ten times.

Step five - Using the power of your imagination. Envision a steady stream of pink light flowing from your heart center out to your target’s heart. Excite your emotions with positive thoughts and feelings. As you repeat those statements allow that energy to flow out towards your target. Your emotions of love are what equate to the frequency interacting with your target. This will trigger their positive feelings towards you.

The only way to know the value of this exercise is to actually practice it. The key to it are the statements done with the increased feelings, as you deliberately direct the flow of energy from your heart center out towards your target. The longer you hold this meditation the stronger the energy coming into target with the other will be; they will feel stronger feelings and sensations of acceptance and love towards you.

This exercise is not limited to relationships alone. It can be used in your office space it can also be used in business to further influence your potential customers to take action. Using the exercises found in the following section along with this exercise can produce outstanding influence over the feelings of others towards you.

Chapter 7

Persuade People to Your Way of Thinking

Do you have an idea or a belief that you would like to get someone else to understand and support but it all seems very hard? First you must know that people hold very steadily to their belief systems and guard their beliefs with their life.

You may not have thought of this before but the belief creates the man. People choose beliefs and concepts that make them feel safe and comfortable in order to function in the world. Most of a person's concepts and beliefs are based on their own personal experiences. Trying to convince a person of something that they have not seen nor experienced, is often a bit challenging.

When a person is introduced to a new belief or concept about life they immediately put up resistance. The average person can only relate to life based on their own personal belief system which is based on what they have experienced from life. They are often incapable of understanding someone else's belief. The idea is, if I have never experienced it, if it is untrue for me then it is not true to begin with.

When a person meets with a new concept they weight it with their own concept and if it does not match with their own they tune it out as wrong.

People are always matching new information with what they have already agreed on in their own personal life. If what they have just encountered matches with that they already know or believe then they are very accepting of the new information. However if the new information is entirely different, it does not matter if it is good information people will tune it out.

On the other hand, if that new information has a few points which match with what they already know and believe they will be open to receiving the other parts that maybe entirely new or different.

The human mind is always seeking what is familiar in order to create a match. If there is no match a wall goes up. This is happening all the time in every way that you may not even realize this. Ten separate people may walk down the same road, and each and every one of those ten people will see the things that they are already familiar with, yet their mind will have the tendency of filtering out anything else that is completely unfamiliar to them.

How then would you persuade a person to your way of thinking without them getting angry or putting up major resistance? Start by knowing in full detail the idea you want to present them with them. Secondly, know very clearly what the other person already believes.

This part is crucial. Take a bit of time to examine what the similarities are between what you want to introduce to the other person and what they already believe. You will certainly need to take some time to meditate on the shared similarities between what they already believe and the new ideas you want to introduce them too.

In order to persuade them to the new concept, start with their present belief on the matter. Engage them in what they already believe. Start a conversation going, and then begin to share the similarities of the new concept into the conversation.

Let us imagine that you are speaking with someone who has a very strong Christian based belief but you are interested in an alternative religion such as Buddhism. If you suddenly sprung up and gave your thoughts on Buddhism, the other person would tell you all the reasons why Buddhism was not the religion for them, or even why it is not a good religion.

However in order to persuade them to your way of thinking you would start off the conversation on the topic of Christianity. As the other person moved deeper into the conversation you could then say something such as, “You know I realized that although Buddhism is a different religion to Christianity there are so many similarities. Did you know that the base concept of love and tolerance is the same as Christianity? Were you aware that Buddhism also supports all the commandments found in Christianity?”

You can continue like this by becoming even more specific. Without forcing the other to accept your way of thinking keep sharing the similarities. Slowly they will begin to accept the similarities for themselves. You never have to insist on anything. By introducing the similarities they will gradually begin to incorporate the concepts you are trying to get them to accept.

In an argument you may want to first show the other how similar their point is to your point. Explain to them how the two of you already agree and are actually addressing the same concerns in a unique way. Be specific by pointing out the things that they have said that you agree with before introducing the new point. By doing this you remove the resistance and open the other person up to taking on your point of view.

Simply hearing the words, “I agree with you,” or “I understand the point you are trying to make,” puts the other person at ease and makes them more open to what you have to say from that point forward.

Chapter 8

People Are Motivated by This...

People are not driven by logic people are driven by emotions. And the greatest emotional motivator is the fear of pain. The fear of pain is often a greater motivator than the reward that could be achieved if action were taken.

Did you get that last part? Let's repeat this part all over again. People are so overcome by fear of pain and suffering that this alone will motivate them to take action, even action that may be illogical. Fear of suffering is a greater driving force than pleasure. We live in a fear based world. Fear drives people more than pleasure in most cases. Using a person's fear of pain and suffering makes for an easy way of manipulating a person to take action.

The pain I am referring to is not necessarily a physical pain. Pain can be emotional, or it can be psychological.

Returning to the psychology of human needs you will notice that underlining all need is fear. People experience great pain and suffering when their needs are not met. There is no greater pain than being lonely hence the human need for love or a support group. The pain of not having proper food and shelter or money to supply this is another source of pain that can keep many people awake all night.

Ill health or the fear of dying is again one of the most troubling sources of fear that will drive the human need to live, which will cause a person to do almost anything.

So as you can see all need even the individual needs which seem superficial are linked to a person's deeply rooted fear.

A man reaching the age of retirement and realizing that he has no retirement funds, no saving and no family to support him will go through intense psychological suffering. The fear that without money he will be unable to maintain a spouse or live out his retirement in comfort can cause him debilitating fear. The fear can be so great that it can cause him incredible mental instability.

Those penetrating fears will motivate that man to do whatever he can to create a source of income that will allow him to live as he wants. One of the highest suicide rates beyond the teenage years are those who are facing retirement.

A man or woman who has just broken up with their partner will go through an intense grieving process that will mirror the grieving process of losing another to death.

The emotional pain becomes so severe and frightening they will do all they can to alleviate the emotional pain by any means necessary. It will force that person to do anything to get that partner back, although, they are fully aware that the ex is no good for them. And, if they cannot get the partner to return they may grab the next person they meet only to get over the intense pain of being alone and the pain of feeling unloved.

People who are afraid of the possibility of dying will do just about anything to prevent the possibility of death. They will do all that they can to secure good health and a good living so they can ward off illness which would lead to death.

When a person comes face to face with the possibility of ill health or dying the fear is enough to drive them to do some very irrational things. This isn't to say that many of the alternative methods of healing are not valid but there are some absolutely bazaar practices that actually harm others that are too grave even to mention here.

You can use fear to motivate people into positive action. It's done all the time in the news as well as with advertisements for various businesses.

The next time you sit down to watch your favorite show pay attention all the advertisements. The best examples are the long infomercials. They spend a great portion of the earlier part showing you all the horrors that have happened to a person who does not have their product, and then this is followed by the miraculous soothing away of the problem after the product has been purchased.

Please also note that for obvious reasons this vigorous technique is not always necessary to use or if used you can tailor it to moderate levels. Building fear in another can cause adverse reactions, such as panic, depression and so forth. Be certain to follow up with the solution. Never ever leave another hanging in a state of despair. The energy you create in others will either bless you or curse you. Besides, people love others who can not only show them the dangers or possible fears that could occur, but they will love you more for showing them a solution to those problems. They will literally associate you as the savior to their worries and fears.

So how can you take advantage of the human tendencies of fear to produce the desires that you want? By using the following steps:

• Secret to Driving the Emotional Vehicle

Step one - Take some time for contemplation. By meditating on this first, ideas will come to your mind that would not have come before. Show them what they will lose if no action is taken

Step two - Can you amplify what they may lose with as much emotion as you can? Can you find at least 5-7 horrible possible outcomes if no action is taken?

Step three - Hold that person in that state for several long minutes. Keep talking about the horrible possibilities for a while.

As you do allow the feeling of fear to become strong and built up in their mind.

Step four - Watch their reaction, you know when they are hooked if and when they begin to feed the fear with their own possible worries and thoughts. They will begin to agree with you and fill in the story for themselves.

Step five - Present them with the solution. That solution should be what they want and what will alleviate their pain, fear and worry. The solution should be an obvious solution and one that is very helpful. Just as you created a lot of emotional fear, create just as much emotional relief and excitement for the solution.

It is extremely important that you make them aware that there is a relief to their suffering or distress if they take a particular action.

Amplify the solutions and don't stop until their emotions shift from a fear based emotional level to a hopeful and excited and relieved emotional level. This excited, relieved emotional state will be backed up by the fear they previously experienced and they will be very relieved to take the action that you want them to take.

Spend a day studying the commercials that appear during your favorite shows. Infomercials are best. As you study them you will gain even more insight into the method of using fear to drive positive actions.

Chapter 9

The Covert Way to Persuade People to Do Exactly What You Want

Are you ready for more covert ways to persuade others to do what you want without them protesting or even realizing that you will greatly benefit from their actions?

Another way to motivate another to take action is to match what you want to what they want. The method here is to do it in such a way that you don't emphasize what you want at all. What you want will run in the background as you emphasize the benefits that the other will achieve for taking the action that you want. You have to amplify the benefits which they will receive which should be numerous. You must also paint a clear picture of those benefits in the mind of the other until they are so excited that they cannot resist taking action, in which case the action will be one which benefits you.

There is a popular saying that states, 'One should bait the hook to suit the fish.' This is where it is important to know the needs of a person you want to influence. No two people are the same, and each must be baited with what will drive him to take action.

A mother who wants to persuade her young son to eat more vegetables tried in numerous ways to get him to eat healthy but to no avail. Her son had already been thin compared to his other friends. It was something he spoke about endlessly because it really troubled him. The others were stronger and because of their size they were often taken much more seriously. This really affected his self esteem in the group. Naturally he really had the desire to become fuller.

One day the mother saw her cue. She said to him, “You know you are so thin because you eat too many French fries and chicken nuggets and way too many sweets. Do you know that if you eat a large plait full of delicious broccoli and spinach with real chicken or beef you will actually become stronger and bigger?” Whether this would make him as big as he wanted did not matter. All that mattered was that she never had to tell him twice to make him willing to eat more healthy choices as she had planned.

Often we go on job interviews and focus all our attention on what the company can do for us. One way to create a winning interview and get offers is to flood the interviewer with the benefits you can bring.

Before going on the interview take some time to apply the exercise in, “Becoming your target.” Use your imagination to sense what sort of employee the interviewer would want for such a position. Make a note of it, resonate with those needs, and then present them at your interview as the qualities you will bring to the job. Be graphic with as much detail. How can someone say no to someone who is a match for what they are already looking for?

There is no greater place of difficulty than trying to persuade your partner to take out the trash or do some of the things that they may not be willing at first to do. Nagging and begging very rarely ever work. It may work for that immediate moment but because the person is not motivated they will return to the previous behavior patterns.

In one case this one young woman really wanted to take a vacation which her boyfriend saw as just unnecessary at the time. To him money was an issue he was just not willing to part with but in her case she needed to take the time off which she did. While preparing for her trip, she did all that she could to beg him to put his money worries aside and take the trip but he resisted. "I don't want to be alone," she said. He still did not bother. "It will be so much more fun having you there," she begged, and still he ignored.

After she had left for her trip she realized that she had made everything about that trip about her. Basically she tried to convince him about how much fun she was going to have and how much money she was going to spend to make herself happy. She even tried to convince him to come along to make her happy.

When it occurred to her what she had done she saw a new way to convince him. Her boyfriend had recently bought a brand new camera. He absolutely loved photography and he was always looking for new exciting sceneries to capture. In addition to that he had joined a new photographers group where the members shared some of the amazing photographs they had taken. He had recently complained that many of his pictures were lacking that wow factor because it was still quite cold and drab where he was at that time of the year.

She realized that this was going to be her source of persuasion. While already on her trip she called him. “I am having a wonderful time she said. I just cannot believe how amazingly scenic this place is, it looks like a photographers dream. Someone could spend all day capturing loads of wonderful images and still not run out of scenes to take pictures off. As a matter of fact I met a photographer and his wife and the images they took were breath taking postcard quality images. Well, it would not take an expert photographer to take award winning images in this place.”

This was the essence of her persuasion and as she painted even brighter images of what he would benefit from coming, she made sure to no longer ask him to come or even talk about her needs. Instead she seemed happy without him she was simply painting images and a story in his mind that supports what he wanted.

Naturally, he started to think of the monthly photography competitions that he and his group had and how much he so wanted to win; but did not feel very inspired to go out in his cold Detroit town which left him uninspired.

The idea of all the great images he could take with his new camera. The much needed vacation that he really could do with plus all the fun his girlfriend seemed to be having as she met new people he decided that he could afford a mini break after all. By the next day he was on his way to meet her in the Islands.

The covert way of persuasion is to match what you desire to the needs and wants of others. This takes thought, it takes some time to contemplate upon how what you want can be linked to what the other person wants. Remember to become your target by shifting your awareness inside of the one you want to persuade. Become them, know what will drive and excite them to take action, and then match it to what you want.

• 3 Things You Need to Know

There are 3 things you need to know about the average person. The average person cannot easily use their imagination.

The first thing is that most people's imaginations are taken up by whomever or whatever is more dominant in their lives, the television is a good example of what persuades people, your boss, your spouse, whatever group you are a part of.

Because most people do not use their imagination they leave their minds open to the constant influence of those who are more mentally driven. Even the most educated people in the world are being heavily influenced. What is education really but a systematic programming of information into your subconscious mind which you must memorize and memorize again, then recap in a few test.

The second thing you must know is that most people do not know how to imagine a solution to their problems. It is like a car whose wheel has being stuck in the mud. People can replay the problem again and again and again without ever using their imagination to find a solution.

The third thing you must know is that people want to be led; they want a solution to the problem that they cannot solve. The first chance that a valid or what seems like a valid solution presents itself 99.99% of people will accept it and be happy.

The way to create a valid solution is to paint a detailed picture for the other. Fill in the picture with details. The more details that you are able to give to the other person in the form of examples that excite them, the more you woo them in. Create a new full story to replace the old story. Add dimensions to the story and make sure to add high emotions.

• How to Create the Right Mental Picture

Step One - You must set aside some quiet time alone where you will not be disturbed.

Step Two - Get into a deeply relaxed state of mind by following your breath for a few moments. This is crucial because as you follow your breathing this will lead your mind into a clearer more intuitive state where all answers and details will present themselves that you may not have access to otherwise.

Step Three - Now ask yourself, “What do I really want? In what way do I really want it? Now ask yourself who your target would be if you don’t already know.

Step Four - Then ask yourself, “How do I tie in what I want to what they want? As you find the details to this answer focus on the details of what they want. Flood your mind with what they want. It is no longer about you. Remind yourself that what you want will come by first giving the other person what they want.

Step Five - Can you see, feel, smell or taste what they want? As you use your imagination create a full picture of their wants and their needs. See them fulfilling their wants and what it would take to make them feel content. Can you come up with at least 7 benefits to having them achieve their goals? Doing that, will fill you with a greater understanding that you can later use to motivate them into action. As you create the details write them all down. Remember that people need to be stimulated with a lot of positive details that support what they want and need in order to take action.

Step Six - Using the power of your mind see yourself talking to them about what they will achieve. Still using the power of your imagination, see them agreeing to it and getting very excited with the exact points that you are presenting to them. Keep yourself in that meditative state with them for as long as you can as you do see them growing increasingly excited by your ideas.

Step Seven - Now it is time for you to present your points and ideas to them physically. Talk to them as you hold them in that place by talking about the positive benefits they could gain. Remember it is all about them and very little to do with what you want at this point. The longer you entertain the ideas and benefits with them their mind will become convinced, their resistance drops and they will soon no longer need you to tell them anything. They will begin to paint the picture for themselves and then take the action that you already conspired for them to take.

Step Eight - Finally in the end encourage them to take action. Of course that comes after you have engaged all of their senses with the desires to fulfill their needs. In many cases you may never ever have to tell them to take action because if you were convincing enough to hold them emotionally, mentally in the throes of excitement for the benefits they will achieve, then you have done your job. But, if they seem to stall then they need a gentle push. At this point they cannot say no anyway. You have already effectively persuaded them.

Eight powerful steps to get what you want! The number eight is a powerful and divine symbol of giving and receiving. Add value and value will return to you. This value obviously is based on a perception and a person's needs yours and theirs. There is no need or level of persuasion that is too great or too small.

Conclusion

The ability to persuade others in love or business is a great skill for anyone to have. True success depends on persuasion. A true persuader cannot help but have a great, fantastic life because he understands that true persuasion is about creating a symbiotic relationship with others, he is never ever a parasite.

In a symbiotic relationship both parties benefit from the situation. However in a parasitic relationship one person is always taking always gaining leaving the other person feeling used and abused.

Although the idea of persuasion may seem very manipulative it all greatly depends on how you are choosing to look at it. Whether you know it or not everyone to some degree is trying to persuade each other.

Men and woman are persuading each other to perceive each other favorably or to remain in the relationships. Your boss is on a daily quest to persuade you and other employees to do whatever it takes to run the business. If you are a parent you are always trying to persuade your children to do what is best for their wellbeing.

The problem is that few people know the secrets of effective persuasion. Now that you are armed with the secrets you must practice and practice again. Like everything good persuasion is a skill that must be perfected with practice.

- Let us Recap With Some of the Essential Points

- You can only effectively persuade others by giving them what they want.
- Human beings are driven by their needs. Every single moment of the day we are moved by our needs. The entire system on planet Earth is comprised of action based on needs.
- In order to persuade anyone you must know what needs are driving them at the moment. You must know which need is controlling their thoughts at the present time.
- Creating a non judgmental atmosphere is one of the first states to effectively persuading others.
- When a person feels loved and accepted they will be open to any suggestions that you make and your ability to persuade them becomes very easy.
- You can psychically influence what others feel about you by broadcasting positive thought waves towards them.

- To introduce a new idea to another show them what is common between what they already believe and the new concept you want them to accept.
- People are driven by fear much more than they are driven by pleasure. Use fear to drive others to positive results.
- The covert way to getting others to do what you want is to give them more of what they want without putting too much emphasis on what you do want.

Now you are equipped with the skills to persuade anyone. By applying the techniques consciously, you will increase your persuasion skills until they become a very natural part of who you are. Don't wait for a special opportunity to apply these methods. Instead get creative, imagine different scenarios and what you would do to enthusiastically persuade others to your desired outcome.